Institute of Education Sciences (IES), National Center for Special Education Research (NCSER).

Single-Case Intervention Research Design and Analysis

<http://ies.ed.gov/funding/researchDesign.asp>

This site includes a series of video training modules on designing scientifically valid single-case design research studies and analyzing single-case data.

The PE Geek

<http://thepegeek.com>

This site bridges the gap between physical education and information communications technology. Jarrod Robinson from Australia is known throughout the online community as the PE Geek and manages the site that includes a blog of the same name that is an invaluable technology resource for teachers seeking effective use of 21st-century tools in physical education. The site is full of articles on ways for PE teachers to incorporate technology into their lessons. Jarrod also has information on PE-specific apps and blogs, including apps to help you organize classes and track behaviors.
